CAYMAN BUSH MEDICINE

“Not too long ago, the Cayman Islands were three lonely little islands, crowded with tangled wilderness and visited only by hurricanes. In those days, people lived on what they could harvest from the land and sea.

Early Caymanians learned what could harm them, what could heal them, what could nourish them and what could shelter them.

They roofed their houses with silver thatch and framed their walls with sturdy Ironwood. They washed their clothes with Washwood and cured their ills with plants like Headache Bush and Fevergrass.

Bush Medicine played a unique role in survival of early Caymanians at a time when doctors were few and far between.”
